ISSUE #003

THIS IS A FREE ZINE!

welcome, welcome one and all to ISSUE! NUMBER!

THREE! of M.A.P.Z!

now that i've done 3 whole issues i can officially let this zine die if i want. once is happenstance, twice is coincidence, three times is a sadly short run for such an important and influential zine. i'm already looking forward to telling people how much better the old days of real anarcho pop were. here, today, we've returned to some of the topix we've discussed in previous issues (Chumba & Crass, mar shampla) but rest assured that we're not stuck in a rut. new ideas and new approaches are always exploding into being here in Maison de M'Anarcho Pop Zine, as you'll see from some of the new features. go ahead, gentle reader: knock yourself out with all the punkish poptastic goodness you'll between these pages. you deserve it.

i'm SORRY this took so long to turn up, computer issues r the main culprit, i have been BEDEVILED the past few months! It's a lot! This zine was 3/4 done when i took my glitchy computer in to a computer man who broke it worse, work could only resume in like january! lots has happened that i don't have space to write about, so i'll confine myself to wishing you all a belated happy new year with lots of vaccines. we're alive!

KISS KISS...CRASS CRASS

BY GOAT

CHAPTER ONE

Crass the band was walking down the street one fine afternoon when suddenly they spotted a pub. "Let us perceive the interior of this establishment." "Verily. Let us." They entered.

CHAPTER TWO

Crass the band had been kicked out of the establishment.

"It seems we've been kicked out of the establishment" said Crass vocalist.

"Indeed. It does seem we've been kicked out of the establishment." said Crass drums.

"It's a shame that we've been kicked out of the establishment" Crass number three mused.

THE END....OR IS IT???

On both versions of their album English Rebel Songs, Chumba sing a song called the "Chartist Anthem" which, as memory serves, is also included in Horrible Histories: Vile Victorians by Terry Deary. The Chartists were a 19th c. movement for political equality at a time when most British people - men or women - weren't allowed to vote. The Chartist Anthem is a very moving song that expresses the hard road of the Chartists - "the way is blind with blood and sweat and death sings in our ears/but time is marching on our side/we will redeem the years". But did the Chartists ever sing this song?

I can't find a definite provenance for the anthem even with some vigorous googling: it's cited on some websites as being the work of Dudley poet Ben Boucher: he was real & alive then, but as far as I can tell he was never a chartist. There's one known Chartist hymn book, that afaict doesn't include the so-called Anthem. So when was the anthem written, and who by? Did many, or any, Chartists sing it? It's just a....Chumbamystery

Book:

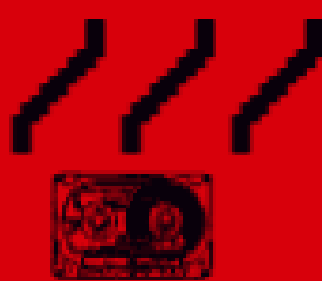

↳ Republic of Shame
by Caelainn Hogan

An account of the institutionalization of unmarried mothers in Ireland. Combines a brief history of the institutes - the magdalene laundries, the mother and baby homes - with an account of the author's interviews and encounters with the people who lived in them. The author is a journalist, not a historian, which means the book can't answer all the questions about Ireland's dark past. The lack of an index, or citations, is annoying. However the book's strength is in its focus on first-person testimony from the people whose lives were damaged, and the little details are what really make you angry. Never again.

TU: Puncaí na hÉireann

TG4, 2017. I saw some of this documentary about Ireland's punks on first broadcast, but for a long time it wasn't available on TG4's website. I fulminated over this for some time before I realised I should send T na G an e-mail asking WHY it wasn't available. I did send an e-mail & I'm glad, because they DID upload it! Having seen the parts I missed, I appreciate this doco more. Interviewing Irish people young and old who've been or are P-U-N-K, they caught something of the humour and hope and wickedness that I LOVE about my chosen subcult. & it helped spark my interest in the
