you have to realize that someday you will die.
until you know that,
you are useless.

This is your life,
good to last
drop.

It doesn't get any better than
this.

This is your life,
and it is ending
one minute
at a time.

it is only after you have lost everything that you are free to do anything

Most people
are used
to just watching.

The only way to make them stop watching and act is to get down from the stage.

A community in which people direct their own activities and look out for each other does not need a prison or factory built in it to "create jobs." A community of people who share their own channels of communication are not at the mercy of any corporate media version of "truth." A community of people who make their own music and art and organize their own social events would never settle for the paralyzing spectacle of MTV, let alone computer dating services and pornography. A community of people who know each other's histories and understand each other's needs can work through conflicts without any need for interference from uniformed strangers with guns. The extent to which we can create these communities is the extent to which we can solve the problems we face today, and no legislation or charity will do this for us.

Institutions can only be as good as the people who make them work—and they usually aren't, anyhow. Solutions "from above" have proved ineffective over and over: the red tape of medical programs, the inefficiency of social services, the lies of presidents. If you don't trust the people, you can be sure you can't trust the police.

What "insurance" could you buy that would keep you safer than living in a world where people actually cared about each other?

Perhaps you should find yourself some like-minded friends, stop talking about how bad traffic was and start discussing tactics. Or swear to yourself that you will never, ever again do anything but chase your wildest dreams, every moment of your life. Or buy yourself a liter of gasoline and a bottle. It could be your last purchase ever.

the future is unwritten

Anarchy.

Once you've tried it,
nothing else compares.
